

Abstract of the Disclosure

The present invention generally relates to the determination of photoluminescence of samples. More specifically, the present invention is directed to a method particularly adapted to samples which are flowing liquids. The method and apparatus are useful for measuring photoluminescing species such as those found in liquid chromatography and capillary electrophoresis.